UMBRELLA FIENDS.

IDIOSYNCRASIES OF WELL KNOWN

A Man's Character Shown by the Way He Carries His Umbrello-The Obnorious and Daugerous "Jabber"-Swell, Granger and I'nt Man.

A man often shows his character by the way he carries his umbrella. If he is absentminded he will lug it by the top of the handle, careless of whether is is folded or flapping, and indifferent if it trails behind him upon the pavement. He may be bustling, hurrying, in high spirits, and if so he frequently twirls his umbrelle in circles from the wrist as he spins down the street. If he is fat he uses his umbrolla as a cane or parasol; if he is a clergyman be carries it limply before him; if he is angry be grabs it by the handle as if it were a club; and if he is a dude he pokes the fernle in front of him until it strikes the pavement, and as he passes on twitches it forward again.

One of the most fundiar of the umbrella-carrying species is the "jubber" or "abover." He lugs his parachute under his arm, with the ferule straight out behind and the handle rigid in front. He pokes off more hats, indents more stomachs, gouges more ribs and jabs more spines as he walks along then one could shake a stick at in a week. He never stops to see who he has purched. Not he. With his lips compressed as tightly as the lid of an iron chest, he goes on, frowning, bumping into pursors by, and with an air that seems to say: "If you don't get out of the way you'll be burt." He is generally old and thin, but sometimes he has not reached middle age. The public abhors him, and he is a nuisance that Ko-Ko most increasably omitted from his famous list, THE MILITARY SWELL.

The heavy military swell is another interesting umbrella carrier. His chest sticks out like a pouter pigeon's, his new play hat glistens like Day & Martin's blacking. His pantaloons are the newest, his freek coat the tightest, his mustache the waxiest and his glare the most ferocious seen on the promenade. He carries the umbrella by his side a good deal as if it were a sword, sticking closely to his portly figure. It is a soldierly act. Even his traducers couldn't deny that. Behold him, with his dandy parasol at an angle of forty-five degrees, close to his rits, as he strides along in true military step, the admiration and envy of every helmeted pollerman on the beat and the butt for vulgar jokes from every barefeeted passing

Then there is the countryman from way back, who lugs his venerable rain-distributor with him when he goes over to Ridgeway park. See him on the bout! His back is toward us, and his nuclent, facted, blue para-chute is outlined beside him. He carries it like a hoe, and a hoe that he doesn't care much about. Its creases are worn by weather, its handle was painted, but the paint has worn off. He is an emblem of the hayseed re-gions, and so is his parasol, which he clings to with a grip like the grip of destiny. He may not log his umbrella with much grace, but when he gets to Ridgeway park it will be there with him; and, no matter how many times he "saves his life" with the island beer, he will hang on to his rain protector, and go back with it to his bome among the corn patches and wheat fields,

THE VERY PAT MAN. It is a rare thing for the very fat man to use his unshedla except as a parasol. It words off the ana's worthing summer rays from his round and persparing countenance. With his pudgy hand he grasps the bandle and carries the paraclute over his crown, while his summer yest flaps to and fro, and the entire area of his person is coursed by little rills that run into his shoes. He enjoys his umbrella more than most people. As a general thing his mouth is open, his brow is moist, his feet come down on the trembling earth like piledrivers as he moves on with majestic step, and his manner of breathing resembles that of the perpoles when that fish comes to the top of the briny billows to blow,

The Norfolk-jacketed young man from the the scuthers, is a noticeable specimen of the genus of umbrelia carriers. The rim of his straw but is as stiff as the bow of a rich man to a poor relation, and his attire is faulties, for is in not a "gilded" youth! His black silk under the its wrapped so small and so tightly that it looks the a Cambridge walking stick. He carries it daintily and negligently in front of him, as he samutars by the sad sea waves, watching the witching gambols of the maidens in the mark. He is harmless; so is his para-Neither of them are intended for use, and both runto a combination that doesn't look at all out of place on the golden sands of the sounding hore, when August's sun some ambitiously.-Philadelphia News.

Introducing a New Brand. The wine Jobbers sometimes resort to a scheme that puts money in their pockets but keeps that of their customers long tied up in cellars. For example, a new brand of wine comes into the market. The first consider-ation of the jebber is how to get a run on it. The customary advertising methods are brushed adde as inadequate and slow, for you should know that wine must go with a first bang! boom! else it will be a losing speculation.

Three good looking, well dressed gentlemen walk into a leading botel, register as from distant and different cities and order a sumptious diamer. The head waiter is asked to profirst-class hotel with so meager and backnumberish a wine list. Haven't you the

The waiter politely replies that it is not in the house if they do not find it on the list. "Then sand out for it," is the command. "Very sorry, gentlemen, but I am not authorized to do that,"

The three Marco Bonaris drinkers craterically enlarge upon the second-class character of a hotel that does not keep "the best wine that ever was brought into New York," being care-ful to make their oratory and the text thereof understood by all the guests in the room. After dinner they sounter up to the office and not the proprietor why they can't get Marco Bozaris wine at his tables, expatiate generally on its superior qualities, and cleverly, though boisterously, manage to leave an impression all over the house that life is of little worth without Marco Bozaris.

The next day the new brand is a ided to the belenguered hotel's wine list. The other day I counted the list at dinner and found that my hotel was carrying twenty-two brands of champagne, for not above a half a dozen of told me the true story of the three oratorical advocates of Marco Bozaria - New York Cor.

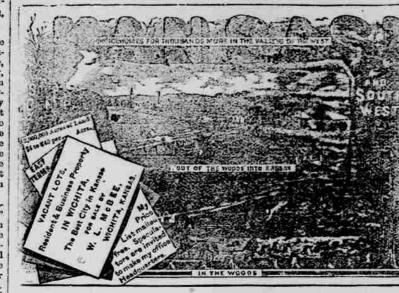

The Latest Thing in Watermelons. The latest thing in meleos is the "scaly bark." This is the second season for this melon, and it is extra fine. It is a dark green color, with irregular patches of a scaly ap-pearance. It is said to be a most reliable variety, and an excellent article for chipping on account of its keeping qualities.—New York Evening Post.

Why He Took Two.

The story is told of a Scotch wife, shortly after the nuptial knot had been tied, mildly expectulating with her hashand for including in two tumblers of whicky toddy just before going to bed, "My dear Agnes, a glass of whisky toddy makes another man o' me." "But, my dear William, you take two." "Ay, Agnes, that gangs to the ither man."
